Summary of this inspection

Why we carried out this inspection

This was a routine inspection to check that essential standards of quality and safety referred to on the front page were being met. We sometimes describe this as a scheduled inspection.

This was an unannounced inspection.

How we carried out this inspection

We looked at the personal care or treatment records of people who use the service, carried out a visit on 7 May 2013, talked with people who use the service and talked with staff. We reviewed information we asked the provider to send to us.

We also looked at the provider's 2012 feedback survey report.

What people told us and what we found

We spoke with people who use the service and looked at the provider's 2012 feedback survey report. People were satisfied with the care and treatment they had received. One person told us that they were "tremendously happy" whilst another had described the service as "thorough" and "professional". At the time of our inspection there had been one complaint in 2012. We saw that this had been fully investigated and resolved to the person's satisfaction.

People were asked for their consent before any treatment was carried out. They were always examined by a doctor who assessed their skin type and sun exposure history to determine their level of risk of getting skin cancer. Photographs were taken of each mole which were analysed by the doctor and specialists at the provider's head office. The person was sent a written report, summarising their mole analysis. If a mole needed to be removed, the person was referred to a specialist.

You can see our judgements on the front page of this report.

More information about the provider

Please see our website www.cqc.org.uk for more information, including our most recent judgements against the essential standards. You can contact us using the telephone number on the back of the report if you have additional questions.

There is a glossary at the back of this report which has definitions for words and phrases we use in the report.

Our judgements for each standard inspected

Consent to care and treatment

✓ Met this standard

Before people are given any examination, care, treatment or support, they should be asked if they agree to it

Our judgement

The provider was meeting this standard.

Before people received any care or treatment they were asked for their consent and the provider acted in accordance with their wishes.

Reasons for our judgement

People consented to care and treatment by virtue of the fact that they elected to attend the clinic. People were required to provide written consent for the taking of photographs, informing their GP and for the skin screening. If people were under the age of 16, they were required to be accompanied by an adult. We looked at a sample of consent forms and saw that these had all been completed. We spoke with people who use the service who confirmed that they had agreed to an examination and had been asked for written consent. We also looked at the provider's 2012 feedback survey report. All 39 respondents felt that the doctor had answered their questions in a way they could understand.

If the screening identified moles that needed to be removed, the person was referred to another provider who would be responsible for obtaining consent for that procedure.

People should get safe and appropriate care that meets their needs and supports their rights

Our judgement

The provider was meeting this standard.

People experienced care, treatment and support that met their needs and protected their rights.

Reasons for our judgement

Care and treatment was planned and delivered in a way that was intended to ensure people's safety and welfare. When people first attended the clinic the doctor assessed their skin type, sun exposure history and asked whether there were any moles the person was concerned about. We saw that this information was recorded on the provider's electronic records system.

People were always examined by the doctor who took photos of every mole. The photos were uploaded on to the provider's electronic records system for analysis. They were analysed by the doctor who carried out the screening and by one of several specialists at the provider's head office. The analysis involved comparing a person's mole against others which showed early stage melanoma. People were then sent a summary report, which advised whether any moles required removal and a recommended follow-up date depending on the person's results.

If people required a mole to be removed they were either referred to a specialist or to their GP, depending on the person's wishes. We spoke with people who use the service and looked at completed feedback questionnaires. People told us they found the report "informative" and described the service as "thorough". One person said they were "tremendously happy".

There were arrangements in place to deal with foreseeable emergencies. The doctor had received basic life support and told us that they would call the emergency services.

Complaints

✓ Met this standard

People should have their complaints listened to and acted on properly

Our judgement

The provider was meeting this standard.

Comments and complaints people made were responded to appropriately.

Reasons for our judgement

People were given an information leaflet which included the contact details for the provider should they wish to make a complaint. People could also make a complaint via the provider's website. We were told that if a complaint could not be investigated and responded to within three working days an acknowledgement letter would be sent with a time frame for a response. The provider may find it useful to note, that the information available to people who use the service did not outline timescales for complaints.

We asked for a summary of complaints people had made and the providers response. At the time of the inspection there had been one complaint in 2012. We saw that this had been investigated and resolved to their satisfaction. We spoke with people who use the service and looked at the provider's 2012 feedback survey report. People were satisfied with their care and treatment and most would recommend the service to others.

About CQC inspections

We are the regulator of health and social care in England.

All providers of regulated health and social care services have a legal responsibility to make sure they are meeting essential standards of quality and safety. These are the standards everyone should be able to expect when they receive care.

The essential standards are described in the Health and Social Care Act 2008 (Regulated Activities) Regulations 2010 and the Care Quality Commission (Registration) Regulations 2009. We regulate against these standards, which we sometimes describe as "government standards".

We carry out unannounced inspections of all care homes, acute hospitals and domiciliary care services in England at least once a year to judge whether or not the essential standards are being met. We carry out inspections of dentists and other services at least once every two years. All of our inspections are unannounced unless there is a good reason to let the provider know we are coming.

There are 16 essential standards that relate most directly to the quality and safety of care and these are grouped into five key areas. When we inspect we could check all or part of any of the 16 standards at any time depending on the individual circumstances of the service. Because of this we often check different standards at different times but we always inspect at least one standard from each of the five key areas every year. We may check fewer key areas in the case of dentists and some other services.

When we inspect, we always visit and we do things like observe how people are cared for, and we talk to people who use the service, to their carers and to staff. We also review information we have gathered about the provider, check the service's records and check whether the right systems and processes are in place.

We focus on whether or not the provider is meeting the standards and we are guided by whether people are experiencing the outcomes they should be able to expect when the standards are being met. By outcomes we mean the impact care has on the health, safety and welfare of people who use the service, and the experience they have whilst receiving it.

Our inspectors judge if any action is required by the provider of the service to improve the standard of care being provided. Where providers are non-compliant with the regulations, we take enforcement action against them. If we require a service to take action, or if we take enforcement action, we re-inspect it before its next routine inspection was due. This could mean we re-inspect a service several times in one year. We also might decide to re-inspect a service if new concerns emerge about it before the next routine inspection.

In between inspections we continually monitor information we have about providers. The information comes from the public, the provider, other organisations, and from care workers.

You can tell us about your experience of this provider on our website.

How we define our judgements

The following pages show our findings and regulatory judgement for each essential standard or part of the standard that we inspected. Our judgements are based on the ongoing review and analysis of the information gathered by CQC about this provider and the evidence collected during this inspection.

We reach one of the following judgements for each essential standard inspected.

 Met this standard This means that the standard was being met in that the provider was compliant with the regulation. If we find that standards were met, we take no regulatory action but we may make comments that may be useful to the provider and to the public about minor improvements that could be made.

 Action needed This means that the standard was not being met in that the provider was non-compliant with the regulation. We may have set a compliance action requiring the provider to produce a report setting out how and by when changes will be made to make sure they comply with the standard. We monitor the implementation of action plans in these reports and, if necessary, take further action. We may have identified a breach of a regulation which is more serious, and we will make sure action is taken. We will report on this when it is complete.

 Enforcement action taken If the breach of the regulation was more serious, or there have been several or continual breaches, we have a range of actions we take using the criminal and/or civil procedures in the Health and Social Care Act 2008 and relevant regulations. These enforcement powers include issuing a warning notice; restricting or suspending the services a provider can offer, or the number of people it can care for; issuing fines and formal cautions; in extreme cases, cancelling a provider or managers registration or prosecuting a manager or provider. These enforcement powers are set out in law and mean that we can take swift, targeted action where services are failing people.

Where we find non-compliance with a regulation (or part of a regulation), we state which part of the regulation has been breached. We make a judgement about the level of impact on people who use the service (and others, if appropriate to the regulation) from the breach. This could be a minor, moderate or major impact.

Minor impact – people who use the service experienced poor care that had an impact on their health, safety or welfare or there was a risk of this happening. The impact was not significant and the matter could be managed or resolved quickly.

Moderate impact – people who use the service experienced poor care that had a significant effect on their health, safety or welfare or there was a risk of this happening. The matter may need to be resolved quickly.

Major impact – people who use the service experienced poor care that had a serious current or long term impact on their health, safety and welfare, or there was a risk of this happening. The matter needs to be resolved quickly

We decide the most appropriate action to take to ensure that the necessary changes are made. We always follow up to check whether action has been taken to meet the standards.
